SCHOLASTIC SCOPE WINNER!

KAYLA WAS SELECTED AS ONE OF FIVE WINNERS FROM ACROSS THE COUNTRY

The November 2018 issue of Scholastic Scope included a narrative nonfiction story "Out of the Flames: The story of the Triangle factory fire and the girls who changed America" by Kristin Lewis. Kayla read this article and was curious about the writing contest which encouraged students to imagine giving a speech summarizing what happened and why it's important to remember this tragedy.

She completed this work independently and, after several drafts, submitted it to the contest. She was one of five winners from across the country and received a copy of Uprising, a historical novel by Margaret Peterson Haddix about this tragedy.

In her words, "When I read the article, I was so impressed at how much courage the women working in the factory had. The article left me with a lot of emotion and that inspired me to try the writing prompt, which was writing a speech. I felt that all of the people who died in the fire deserved to have their stories shared."

Congratulations Kayla!
